POLITICAL POT BOILS

All may seem quiet on the California political front these days, what with the next meeting of the legislature still more than a year away and the prospect for a special session virtually nil at present. But behind the front things are boiling away at a great rate. And they all center around taxation. The plain fact is that California's financial situation is in something of a mess, and everyone and his brother is trying to straighten it out in such a way that he personally won't have to pay any taxes. The state association of county supervisors met in San Francisco last week and aired the whole matter out, getting not much more for their pains than a lot more pains. So serious is the situation and so tired the people of paying taxes that there was talk of having to combat a tax strike. It probably won't come to that. But the county leaders, even though this may look like a mixup belonging exclusively to the state government, are nevertheless plenty worried. Many county activities are financed with state funds, and if those funds were not forthcoming the political bright lights would have much to answer for to their constituents. On the other hand, people are wont to blame county and municipal office holders for exorbitant levies on property, so it is to the interests of the county supervisors to keep such taxes inexorbitant.

"LET'S PAY NO TAXES!"

There is probably not a single form of tax in California today which some group, somewhere, is not pushing a plan to repeal. In fact it has been actually seriously proposed by a Los Angeles contingent that an amendment be offered to the state constitution prohibiting any and all taxation by the state. This, of course, is at the ridiculous extreme, since the constitution of the United States would permit no such amendment in California. It does serve to reflect quite clearly, however, the temper of a tax-weary population. And since the state is facing a 75 million-dollar deficit at the end of the fiscal year and seems to need more instead of fewer sources of income, it is not exactly difficult to understand that the men who hold the reins of state government are stretched quite neatly over a barrel—of dynamite. Two big revenue-getters, the sales tax and the income tax, already have space reserved for a repeal plea on the November, 1936, ballot. The groups working for repudiation of these levies have proposed substitutes calculated to bring in much the same sort of money.

THE NATION'S WORRIES

Leaving the California county supervisors to worry out their problem as best they can, you would not have to go far to find a much bigger package of discomfiture. Take a look at the national scene of last week, and there on the sidelines on either flank of the nine elderly jurists of the supreme court you will see two distinct groups with deeply furrowed brows—the anti-New Deal and the pro-New Deal contingents. The showdown is coming before long on three key laws of the administration: the AAA, the Guffey coal act, and the Utility Holding company act. Things got under way, in fact, a few days ago. What will the supreme court say about this legislation? The answer to that might very well be the answer to where America is going in the future. This, at present, is the picture. No less than 1000 corporations have challenged the constitutionality of the AAA. They have got injunctions to prohibit collection by the government of processing taxes—and as a result $150,000,000 of that money is tied up awaiting court's decision. The revenues of the government are considerably behind budgeted figures at present because of this fact. And the President has warned that unless the AAA is upheld, there will have to be new taxes of some sort.

SLUGS AND ROBS CAMPBELL MAN

George Lanphear, who operates a service station in Santa Clara, was slugged on the head with a heavy wrench early Monday morning and is nursing a badly scarred scalp today. Not satisfied with one clout the robber gave George a second one for good measure, ordered him to open the cash till containing $40, and fled in George's car.

The car was found by Anthony Bargas on the highway near Sunnyside with a cracked engine.

As the hold-up was about to drive away he ordered Lanphear to pull off the phone receiver. This proved an alarm for the police, but to date no trace of the culprit has been found.

Lanphear was told by the man who suddenly appeared in the door of the station that he had run out of gas and wanted a few gallons. When George turned to get the can he was slugged from behind. Then followed the robbing. George is also minus a good overcoat.

STATE MEETS SAN DIEGO IN S. J. TODAY

San Jose, Nov. 28—Having pulled out of their first-of-the-season slump with a pair of smashing victories over the Nevada Wolves and Humboldt State Lumberjacks within a week, San Jose's varsity football outfit looks forward to closing the home season with a bang when it meets San Diego state in a Thanksgiving day battle here.

The Aztecs were likewise unimpressive in their early season efforts, dropping several close games and tying Santa Barbara State, but they rose to trim both the vaunted Redlands university and Loyola teams two weeks ago by 13-7 and 6-0 scores.

The Spartans, unable to click against any opponent but the McKinley club from Honolulu, woke up to shove across three touchdowns against the Wolfpack November 16 to win going away. Six days later they took the hitherto undefeated Humboldt aggregation into camp by a sparkling 25-6 score. The sharp return to form has done much to enhance the Spartan win chances Thursday.

Despite the loss of Jack Martin at one of the tackle spots, the squad is in better than average shape. Charlie Baracchi, veteran end, is still favoring a twisted ankle, while Bob Bruning has a tendon bruise suffered in the Nevada game.

The backfield is intact and all set for the invading Aztecs. A quartet featuring Les Carpenter at quarterback, Franny Pura and Burt Watson at halves and "Bull" Lewis at fullback will probably take the field for the opening whistle. Jim Stockdale and Johnny Hines are both due to see plenty of action at left half and fullback respectively.

Thursday's fray will start at 11 a. m. as an appetizer to the usual Thanksgiving Day trimmings. Last year the Spartans entertained Whittier in a sensational 7-7 battle on Turkey Day before a capacity crowd. The $15,000,000 utility industry turned the heat on the holding company law. And as they did so, things worked toward something of a crisis. The firms are required to register under this act by Dec. 1, and as yet only a few have done so. They feel that the law is unconstitutional, and that therefore they do not have to recognize it. The government, on the other hand, contends that until the law is invalidated or upheld by the court, it nevertheless carries the force of established law. And there are penalties—up to $200,000—provided for firms that do not register. Obviously, it is a situation replete with potential fireworks. The Guffey act, called the Little NRA of the coal industry, was last week challenged by the Pittsburgh Coal company. That law, too, must face the test. Virtually all the New Deal legislation, in fact, will go on the scales presently. And the nation awaits breathlessly. What will the nine elderly gentlemen have to say?

A PRAYER FOR THANKSGIVING

Rev. Myron Cole, of Los Gatos, was the speaker at the Kiwanis Thanksgiving luncheon Tuesday and in the spirit of the season recited a prayer very fitting to the occasion.

"May God have mercy on our grateful souls."

May He keep us from being too pleased with ourselves and our families. We would not be so glad that we live in comfortable houses that we forget those who live in shacks.

Keep us from being too grateful for our good standing in the community, for our good credit ratings, for our influence and success.

We would be grateful but not too grateful that we can educate our children. Fire us with love that will give to others the blessings we give our own.

We would show our gratitude by making room for youngsters beside our own.

Keep us thinking and working for the million and a half children who are not in school, who are on the streets or at work in factories.

Let us, Oh God, never forget them while we pray our grateful prayers to Thee. Father, help us not to be too grateful for our domestic tranquility. Help us to know that for every festering sore there is a cause.

Help us not to be blinded by our own comforts.

Have mercy on our grateful soul."

Ben Curry was program chairman.

Al Meyer, one of San Jose's "city fathers" will speak on Port San Jose at the luncheon next Tuesday noon.

Grieving Friends Gather In Memory of Pioneer Agriculturist.

The funeral services of Joseph Bohnett, pioneer of this country, were held Tuesday afternoon from the Amos Williams chapel.

"Uncle Joe", as many of his intimate friends were wont to call him, was born in Michigan in March 1848, being aged 87 years, 7 months and 28 days at the time of his death Saturday, after but a short illness.

After coming to California he was married to Tamer Barker and lived in the Cambrian district where his eleven children, all surviving, were born.

He was a great lover of flowers and always had quantities of seasonal blooms. His gardens always yielded the choicest of fruits and vegetables. His host of friends remembered his floral tastes and the quantities of bouquets and set pieces paid a silent tribute to this grand old man.

He was a past master of Orchard City Grange and a very active member until recent years. He will long be remembered as one of the entertainers of that society for he many times played numbers on the harmonica and accordion.

The funeral service was conducted by the Rev. Geo. E. Atkinson, of Sebastopol, former pastor of the Campbell Congregational church and old time friend of the family.

The pallbearers were past-masters of the Grange and co-workers of Mr. Bohnett for many years. They were J. E. Wiesen-danger, Robert Scholz, E. K. Clendenning, Harry Barnes, Stanley Smith and Lawrence Hendricks.

Sons and daughters who survive are L. D. Bohnett, San Jose attorney, G. Enos Bohnett of Aromas, Mary A. Evans of Campbell, Pearl B. Powers of Coalinga, Ralph C. Bohnett of Willow Glen, Grace Bohnett, W. Calvin Bohnett, Lois B. Crews, Floyd O. Bohnett and Hattie B. Gardner all of Campbell, and Karl Bohnett of San Jose.

BEDTIME STORY

By THORNTON W. BURGESS

SAMMY JAY ARRIVES

WHEN Reddy Fox arrived at the pond of Paddy, the Beaver, the hunter who was hiding there saw him instantly. So did Lightfoot, the Deer. But no one else did. He approached in that cautious, careful way that he always uses when he is hunting. The instant he reached a place where he could see all over Paddy's pond he stopped suddenly as if he had been turned to stone. He stopped with one foot lifted in the act of taking a step. He had seen Mr. and Mrs. Quack.

Now you know there is nothing Reddy Fox likes better for a dinner than a duck. The instant he saw Mr. and Mrs. Quack, a gleam of longing crept into his eyes and his mouth began to water.

Reddy stood motionless until both Mr. and Mrs. Quack had their heads under water as they searched for food in the mud in the bottom of the pond. Then, like a red flash, he bounded out of sight behind the dam of Paddy, the Beaver. Presently the hunter saw Reddy's black nose at the end of the dam as Reddy peeped around it to watch Mr. and Mrs. Quack. The latter were slowly moving along in that direction as they fed. Reddy was quick to see this. If he remained right where he was and Mr. and Mrs. Quack kept on feeding in that direction, the chances were that he would have a dinner of fat duck. All he need do was to be patient and wait. So, with his eyes fixed fast on Mr. and Mrs. Quack, Reddy Fox crouched behind Paddy's dam and waited.

Watching Reddy and the ducks, the hunter almost forgot Lightfoot, the Deer. Mr. and Mrs. Quack were getting very near to where Reddy was waiting for them. The hunter was tempted to get up and frighten those ducks. He didn't want Reddy Fox to have them because he hoped some day to get them himself.

"I suppose," thought he, "I was foolish not to shoot them when I had the chance. They are too far away now and it looks very much as if that red rascal will get one of them. I believe I'll spoil that red scamp's plans by frightening them away. I don't believe that deer will be back here today, anyway, so I may as well save those ducks."

But the hunter did nothing of the kind. You see, just as he was getting ready to step out from his hiding place, Sammy Jay arrived. He perched in a tree close to the end of Paddy's dam, and at once he spied Reddy Fox. It didn't take him a second to discover what Reddy was hiding there for. "Thief! Thief! Thief!" screamed Sammy, and then peered down at Reddy with a mischievous look in his sharp eyes. There is nothing Sammy Jay delights in more than in upsetting the plans of Reddy Fox. At the sound of Sammy's voice, Mr. and Mrs. Quack swam hurriedly toward the middle of the pond. They knew exactly what that warning meant. Reddy Fox looked up at Sammy Jay and snarled angrily. Then, knowing it was useless to hide longer, he bounded away through the Green Forest to hunt elsewhere.

When a business concern has a "failure" there are generally two kinds of creditors. Just a plain creditor and a preferred creditor. Can you tell me the difference?

Sincerely,
I. M. STUCK.

Dear Mr. Wynn:

There is a chap in my class at college about twenty-two years of age and he has the most peculiar habit I have ever seen. Whenever I look at him he always has something on his nose, for instance, one minute he is juggling a feather on his nose, the next time I look at him he has a book on his nose, at another time he'll be strumming a tune on the bridge of his nose with the tips of his fingers. Can you tell me what in the world his idea is?

Dear Mr. Wynn:

What does a "Union" mean when its men go on strike for more money and shorter hours?

Yours truly,

Whales' Throats

A popular fallacy still in existence is that all whales have small throats and cannot swallow even a herring. The truth is that there are two families of whales—the whalebone whale with a small throat and the sperm whale with a very large one. A few years ago a sperm whale was killed shortly after it had swallowed a 15-foot shark.—Collier's Weekly.

DISHES THAT ARE DIFFERENT

A CREAM puff pastry is very simple to make, but the baking is the test of its perfection.

Bagdad Cream Puffs.

Heat together one cupful of boiling water and one-third cupful of corn oil. When boiling add altogether three-fourths of a cupful of flour mixed with one and one-half tablespoonsful of cornstarch and one-half teaspoonful of salt, all well sifted together. Stir and mix vigorously until the mixture leaves the sides of the pan. Cool and add one at a time three eggs, beating well after the addition of each; now add one teaspoonful of baking powder and beat well and drop by spoonfuls on a baking sheet, shaping into circular form. Bake from 35 to 45 minutes, depending upon the size of the puff. Cool, cut with a sharp knife near the bottom of the puff, remove any doughy center and fill with the following:

Cut one-half a package of dates and one cupful of marshmallows with the scissors. Dip the scissors into water to keep the mallows from sticking. Chop one-half cupful of nutmeats, add one cupful of cream beaten until stiff, add a pinch of salt and a flavoring of vanilla. This amount will make one dozen large puffs.

Irish Kisses.

To one-half cupful of peanut butter add one-half cupful of dates, three-fourths of a cupful of powdered sugar and two unbeaten egg whites. Mix and beat until they are thoroughly blended. Drop by teaspoonfuls on buttered baking sheet and bake 15 minutes. This makes 18 kisses.

GOLDEN PHANTOMS

Fascinating Tales of Lost Mines by Editha L. Watson © W.N.U.

THE FRENCHMEN'S HIDDEN TREASURE

IN SOUTHWESTERN Colorado near the summit of Wolf Creek pass may be seen a finely shaped hill known as Treasure mountain. It guards a park where gold has been concealed, and many things have happened in its shadow.

To begin at the known beginning, along about 1827 a band of trappers gold hunters, and adventurers, most of them Frenchmen, left St. Louis and made their way to this section. They ranged about, looking for a place suited to their wants, and finally settled down. They sent to Taos for supplies, and stayed on for several years.

Then, late one summer, they grew lonesome for the pleasures of St. Louis and packed their accumulated gold for a trip to that city. Just as the pack train left camp, a band of extremely unfriendly Utes came by, attacked the men, and killed about half of them. The rest entrenched themselves to fight, and at the same time they managed to bury the gold and make some maps showing where it was hidden.

At last they managed to get away from the Utes, when they separated for greater safety and agreed to meet at St. Louis. Only two of them ever reached the rendezvous.

Some time later, a Frenchman appeared in a small Mexican settlement in the region of Treasure mountain. He said that he was merely prospecting, but he had some maps which (those who caught a glimpse of them said) looked queer indeed.

Presently he left the region—at any rate, he disappeared and never returned. But the maps came to light in the possession of some Mexicans, not those, however, who knew the Frenchman.

What these men did with the maps is hard to say. Certainly they kept them well out of sight, but the story leaked out and the general location became known.

A man named Asa Poor heard of the strange maps and the marked cache. He recalled that there was a park where the trees bore just such blazes, and he went back to the place to make certain.

The signs were indeed there, but where they pointed Poor did not know. In hopes of getting some information on the general subject, he then asked the Indian agent for information from the Utes; the tribesmen professed to be ignorant. They had heard of such a happening, they said, but they remembered nothing.

Poor and a party of friends then tried to work out the puzzle themselves. They followed the blazes one way and another. They looked all about. At last they discovered a mound of earth—but on opening it there was nothing to be found.

Then a visitor came into the park who claimed that he had seen one of the maps. It had directions written out, he said, and one that he remembered read like this: "Stand on this mound at six o'clock on a September morning; where falls the shadow of the head, there dig for the buried treasure." Hopefully, the men did as the visitor suggested, but their hopes died when no gold resulted.

The next summer a man from Durango came with a divining rod. It showed no indication of gold at the place where Poor and his friends had labored so long.

And so the search has gone on from time to time, as confident seekers hunt for the Treasure mountain gold.

$60,000 IN SACKS

PEOPLE who bury treasure surely ought to be considerate enough to leave some indication of its location. A map is always enough to start a treasure-hunt; notes are good, also, especially when they give details; and even word of mouth, although it is likely to suffer monstrous changes in the course of time, is better than nothing at all.

It is truly exasperating to read the story of old Ben Marshall, half-white, half-Indian resident of Oklahoma in the '60s. Old Ben was wealthy—he owned more than 500 slaves, and his land holdings measured over a thousand acres.

When the Civil war started, Ben disappeared, and only after peace had been declared did he show up again, this time in the Chickasaw nation. (What he did during the war can only be conjectured, but probably he did service as a spy.) After a while he returned to his old home, just long enough to dig up $60,000 in gold, sack it and load it in a wagon. He then drove back to the Chickasaw nation and somewhere near Stonewall he re-buried his gold.

If he ever told anyone the secret of the location, that person did not divulge it. There were no notes among his few documents that shed any light on the place, and most certainly he made no maps.

You will eat a ton of food this year—2,150 pounds, the statisticians say. Milk, fluid and canned, and other dairy products, will account for half of this. (Milk is heavy.) You will eat about 150 pounds of meat, and about the same amount of fresh fruit; 150 pounds of fresh vegetables, not counting 150 pounds of potatoes.

In bread and cakes and breakfast foods and macaroni, you will consume 230 pounds of flour and cereals. Sugar, 102 pounds of it, is the next most important item. Of canned fruits and vegetables, you will eat 38 pounds, states Today.

BEFORE you take any preparation you don't know all about, for the relief of headaches; or the pains of rheumatism, neuritis or neuralgia, ask your doctor what he thinks about it—in comparison with Genuine Bayer Aspirin.

We say this because, before the discovery of Bayer Aspirin, most so-called "pain" remedies were advised against by physicians as being bad for the stomach; or, often, for the heart. And the discovery of Bayer Aspirin largely changed medical practice.

Countless thousands of people who have taken Bayer Aspirin year in and out without ill effect, have proved that the medical findings about its safety were correct.

Remember this: Genuine Bayer Aspirin is rated among the fastest methods yet discovered for the relief of headaches and all common pains... and safe for the average person to take regularly.

You can get real Bayer Aspirin at any drug store—simply by never asking for it by the name "aspirin" alone, but always saying BAYER ASPIRIN when you buy.

The proper treatment for a bilious child

ANY mother knows the reason when her child stops playing, eats little, is hard to manage. Constipation. But what a pity so few know the sensible way to set things right!

The ordinary laxatives, of even ordinary strength, must be carefully regulated as to dosage.

A liquid laxative is the answer, mothers. The answer to all your worries over constipation. A liquid can be measured. The dose can be exactly suited to any age or need. Just reduce the dose each time, until the bowels are moving of their own accord and need no help.

This treatment will succeed with any child and with any adult.

The doctors use liquid laxatives. Hospitals use the liquid form. If it is best for their use, it is best for home use. The liquid laxative most families use is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. Any druggist has it.

State relief rolls have been reduced by 51,000 in the last six weeks and an additional 35,000 have drifted away from relief into regular occupations, largely agricultural, in the last few months. Remaining on relief are some 125,000 able-bodied workers.

Al Capone, Alcatraz Island's most famous "guest," wears long cotton undies just like the rest of the boys there. Following reports from London that the gangster has been buying English silk underwear at $50 a set, Attorney General Cummings ordered an investigation. Prison officials indignantly denied that Capone was allowed anything but regulation clothes and fare.

Resolutions favoring a state tax on chain stores and a one-house legislature, opposing the wanton destruction of agricultural lands by gold dredging operations and attacking the Pacific Gas and Electric Company for its fight against the formation of municipal utility districts to purchase power from the projected Kennet Dam were adopted by the California State Grange in convention at Sacramento.

A new function for universities was disclosed when Graduate Manager W. W. Monahan said that the University of California will cooperate with the state board of equalization in the matter of breaking empty bottles found in the stadium after football games. The purpose is to prevent bootleggers from collecting and re-using bottles with state liquor excise stamps attached. It is said that 1,000 empty bottles is an average "haul" after a major game.

WINE USE GROWS

SACRAMENTO—California drinkers are showing an increased preference for wine. This came to light in the monthly report of the Board of Equalization on beer and wine tax revenues. During October the state received taxes on 2,001,921 gallons of wine, compared with 1,656,570, in September, the report said. Beer consumption, which makes up 79 per cent of the beverages consumed subject to the 2-cent state tax, showed an expected seasonal decrease from September.

PROTECT GIRL; DON'T SMOTHER SELF-RELIANCE

Who says today's girl has too much freedom? A writer in a recent issue of The Parents' Magazine declares that the daughter of the average American family is really the most sheltered of human beings; submits to being supervised and controlled far beyond her brothers. She queries the wisdom of this in a changing world where the position of women is, perhaps, more uncertain than ever before in the history of the human race.

"As boys approach the long-pants age they take unto themselves, with the tacit approval of their parents, all sorts of personal prerogatives relating to their choice of friends, the places they go, the way in which they spend their leisure," says the writer. "At college no one cares what time a boy gets up or goes to bed, where he goes, or how he puts in time outside the classroom. But his sister goes from the shelter of home to an authority to whom she must constantly account for nearly every detail of her life."

"Are parents afraid home training may be less effective for girls than for boys? Are feminine characters weaker? Are there greater dangers in the world for girls than for boys?" the writer asks, and reveals test cases that convince her that parents dread automobile accidents and the results of undisciplined love affairs for their girls.

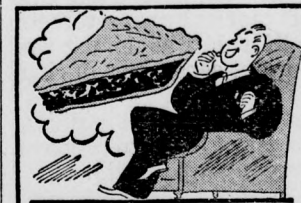

What about the boys? Are they immune to either? The courts would not say so. Neither would the progressive educators who are constantly urging more freedom for the girl that she may become as self-reliant as her brothers. It is impossible to guard against every form of human misbehavior by defining and forbidding it, they say, and refer to statistics to prove that girls sow fewer and tamer "wild oats" than their brothers, are more cautious and conservative in their behavior, and accept responsibility with greater earnestness.

When all is done and said, what do we bring our children up for if not to make them competent citizens, boys or girls well rounded individuals able to cope with the world? In the shelter of home or in the small world of the campus there is good opportunity to experiment with responsibility which begins with one self.

MILLIONS now know the smart thing is to carry a roll of Tums, always. Heartburn, gas, and other symptoms of acid indigestion have a habit of occurring at unexpected times. THOSE SECRET DEALINGS

Whatever else one may think about the reciprocal trade agreement signed last week by the United States and Canada, one aspect of the procedure was anything but conducive to confidence in the ranks of American agriculturists.

Secrecy surrounding details both before and immediately after signing, left agriculture interests with a bad case of jitters. California was among the states that experienced unpleasant sensations during proceedings.

Now all the secrecy, even if a treaty is gaining great concessions for America, is not likely to prepare the public for enthusiastic acceptance of the completed document.

Reasons for California's worry are not remote. The tentative agreement, for example, was known to include tariff reductions on such Canadian commodities as milk, cheese, butter, cattle on the hoof and certain grades of wheat.

Californians were not forgetting especially that meat exports of Canada in 1934 amounted to $15,503,994, and that Canadians would not be averse to boosting that total next year at the expense of American cattlemen.

There is nothing the United States would welcome more than thriving trade with Canada. What with war threatening in Europe, we are going to need all the trade we can get on this side of the Atlantic. The half-billion dollar interchange of trade current today is not to be sneezed at.

But we must be certain we are not simply giving away valuable markets to a competitor. And if we are to know this ahead of time, the veil of secrecy surrounding trade negotiations must be lifted.

WHEN WOULD YOU FIGHT?

How does the average American feel about war?

Almost everyone old enough to read or write has expressed an opinion on this subject, but—

Has anyone taken the trouble to find out, by actually asking large numbers of representative citizens what they would do if the United States declared war?

One such survey, nation wide in scope, is now in progress, being sponsored by the Council for Social Action, a church organization. Answers given to the above question by 493 Californians were disclosed the other day. They make interesting reading.

Ane hundred and eighty-nine said they would fight only after the government had made the utmost use of every agency for peace.

One hundred and seventeen would fight only after United States' territory had been invaded.

One hundred and fifteen would fight in any war the United States might declare.

Thirty-seven would fight only in a war against any internationally recognized aggressor.

Thirty-five would not fight in any war the U. S. might declare.

This group of citizens favored government control of munitions as the most effective means of preventing war, with their second-choice preventative being peace agreements such as the Kellogg pact and their third a more equal distribution of resources and markets.

This is, of course, just one cross-section of one group of middle-class Americans. But if it is representative, it tells us that only 46 per cent of our population would fight under conditions similar to those of the World War—that is, after America had made efforts for peace and before her territory had been invaded.

At least this is evidence of a significant shift of opinion—one that statesmen had best keep in mind during these anxious times.

AGONY TO 10,124!

As we round the corner into the final month of the year, America finds herself more "auto accident conscious" than ever before. Never have people been more thoroughly aroused over the sickening slaughter, the horrible human mutilation going on daily on the highways all about them.

An astonishing thing, then, if we should overlook one particular form of motor accident.

We have always cautioned the private "motorist." It has always been "auto accidents." Scarcely has anyone ever mentioned crashes caused by commercial vehicles. Yet about 18 out of every 100 smash-ups in California involve a bus, stage, taxi, truck, or delivery wagon.

In three years 1085 Californians have been killed and 9039 injured in accidents involving trucks and motor busses. Total: 10,124!

To most of us, this puts a new light on America's greatest problem. If the death toll is to be cut down, trucks and busses, too, as well as private motorists, must be made to toe the line.

Elsewhere in this issue of the Press is published the call for bids for the construction of the first unit of the new high school building.

The Easton Carter family of Salinas joined the family reunion around the festive board at the Gilbert Newcomb home on Union avenue.

Prunes High In Vitamin Content

Research studies, recently completed at a number of American universities, have resulted in the discovery of many important new facts about the food values contained in California prunes. These studies were carried on as part of the promotional and educational program sponsored by the United Prune Growers of California and the California Dried Fruit Research Institute. This is the second of a series of seven articles summarizing the results of the studies.—The Editor.

One of the most important projects undertaken in the recently completed program of research studies on the nutritive values of California prunes was for the purpose of determining the vitamin content of prunes.

All of these original research studies—six of which have been finished—were made possible through fellowships which were established by the United Prune Growers of California. The actual work was carried on under the direction of the California Dried Fruit Research Institute.

The prune vitamin studies were made at the University of California in the laboratory of household science by Dr. Agnes Fay Morgan, Miss Marion J. Hunt and Miss Mildred Squier, assistants on the laboratory staff.

Everybody has heard about vitamins. But even the doctors and dietitians don't know exactly what they are. They do know, however, what they will do and that they are essential to normal health.

As defined by scientists, vitamins are, "one of a class of substances of unknown composition, existing in minute quantity in natural foods and necessary to normal nutrition and growth, absence of which from the diet produces deficiency diseases."

Vitamin A is concerned mainly with growth. Lack of this vitamin causes a suspension of growth. Its deficiency in the diet also leads to increased susceptibility to bacterial infection, the basis of many diseases, among them the common cold. This is one reason why it is often referred to as the anti-infective vitamin.

It was found that California prunes are an excellent source of vitamin A. Measured by the Sherman unit, one of the recognized methods of determining the vitamin content of a food, prunes were proved to have 500 Sherman units of vitamin A per ounce of flesh.

Vitamin B also was found to be present in prunes as a result of the research studies. The importance of this vitamin in the diet is that it acts as an antineuritic.

In the tests made to measure the vitamin B content, California prunes, 50-60 size, were bought at a local retail grocery store. They were typical of the prunes which might be purchased by any housewife to serve in her home.

The studies to determine the vitamin content were made by the rat feeding method. For a period

HIGH SCHOOL NOTES

By WILLIS GREEN

Members of the senior play cast are working out with plenty of vim even during vacation. Last Sunday morning the entire cast met at the home of Miss Boesch and spent the morning in training.

Tuesday afternoon the cast met in the grammar school auditorium with their coach, Mr. Clancy. Due to the cool atmosphere in the auditorium everyone moved out onto the front steps.

Costumes and staging were discussed after the practice.

The first three days of vacation are not vacation for the teachers, who have their turn at going to classes. The first day was spent in San Jose, the second in Berkeley and the third in San Francisco.

For those who are intending to attend this year's production, "The Late Christopher Bean," the admission will be 40 cents. Tickets may be had from seniors. Cards received from seniors must be turned in at the high school office and exchanged for reserved seat tickets. The senior from whom you buy the ticket will in most cases exchange them for you.

Laura Mae Sanford and Mary Jean Pert conducted a well-attended dancing class during the noon hour last Friday. The object of the lessons was to get more students to turn out and have a good time at the noon and at the periodical evening dances.

Last Friday a fairly large number of students attended the first of this year's student body dances. The dance orchestra did a good job of it under the able direction of Vincent Fisci.

Janitors were working hard for many hours scraping, scrubbing and sweeping the wax of fof the floor. Members of the cleanup committee set a good example by showing up Saturday morning and cleaning up the decorations.

Three Doses Relieves Old Stubborn Cough

BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE takes a special pride in "knocking the stuffing" out of tough old coughs that have successfully defied other cough remedies.

Mrs. Wagner, Waterloo, Ont., writes: "For years I have had a chronic cough, and when I catch cold I cough something terrible. I always had to have a Doctor to break it up, but I was told to try BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE, and it sure does the trick. Three doses gives me relief."

No wonder sufferers say "Buckley's acts like a flash." If you have a cough, cold, or bronchitis, get a bottle today. It clears the bronchial tubes, eases breathing and stops the cough. Buckley's is sold everywhere and guaranteed. 45c and 85c at Clark's and all good druggists.—Advt.

of weeks two groups of rats were fed special diets. One group was fed a diet of foods which did not contain any vitamin B. The second group was fed the same diet with the addition of a carefully measured quantity of prunes.

The results of these tests showed that California prunes were a good source of vitamin B. Prunes were found to contain 22 Sherman units per ounce of prune flesh.

Using the same rat feeding method, thorough tests also were carried on to determine the vitamin G content of California prunes.

The rat specimens fed on a diet which did not contain any vitamin G showed practically no gain in weight during the eight weeks period covered by the studies. Besides failing to gain in weight, these rats exhibited serious symptoms of lack of proper nourishment.

A second group of rats fed on the same diet except that prunes were added gained in weight and were healthy in all respects.

Based on these conclusive tests, it was found that prunes were an excellent source of vitamin G. The study determined that prunes contained approximately 80 Sherman units per ounce of flesh. This is a larger vitamin G content than has been reported for any other fruit.

It is comparable in quantity with the vitamin G value present in wheat germ and is one-half to one-fourth the value contained in dried milk, eggs, spinach or liver.

The vitamin studies proved that California prunes are an excellent source for two important vitamins and a good source for a third. This information is an outstanding contribution to the knowledge of nutrition and diet.

The FARMERS CORNER

Executive Secretary

Agricultural Council of California

Focusing attention on one of the most vital phases of the farm recovery program, the California Fruit Growers and Farmers convention, to be held at Sacramento, Dec. 4, 5 and 6, will feature consideration of marketing agreements as one of the major subjects of the three-day meeting, with outstanding state and national authorities on marketing work leading the free forum discussions.

The 1935 convention, which will be held in the assembly chamber at the state capitol, will probably establish a new attendance record, with more than 1,000 farmers and fruit growers from every section of California scheduled to attend.

Discussions of new marketing laws and agreements, both state and federal, will have added importance and significance, due to the attendance at the convention of Chester Davis, administrator of the AAA, who will be the chief speaker at the Friday morning session (Dec. 6).

In California, at least, the marketing agreements have been the most effective feature of the whole AAA program, with the walnut control set-up a splendid example of the fine results which can be accomplished under proper conditions. During two years, the walnut marketing agreement has brought additional returns of more than $4,000,000 to California growers—an outstanding demonstration of the cash value of regulating and stabilizing the flow to market.

The marketing agreements also have particular appeal to the individual farmers and the farm organizations as means of rehabilitating the industry because of the fact that they operate under industry-controlled boards, giving the farmer a dominant voice in working out his own destiny.

The opening day of the convention, Wednesday, Dec. 4, will be featured by the annual report of Director A. A. Brock of the state department of agriculture, followed by addresses by R. W. Blackburn, president of the California Farm Bureau federation; George Sehlmeier, master of the state grange, and R. V. Garrod, head of the Farmers Cooperative and Educational union, California division. A report also will be read by A. E. Bottel of Riverside, president of the California State Association of

Savoldi-Garibaldi On S. J. Mat Card

"Jumping Joe" Savoldi, former world's heavy weight wrestling champion and an outstanding star for Notre Dame's football teams under Knute Rockne, was today signed by Matchmaker Frank Lowery to wrestle the main event at Forman's arena Saturday night.

After much wrangling between opponents, it is still undecided whether it will be a one or two-hour match, although it has been agreed that two out of three falls will decide the winner.

The match will find Gino Garibaldi, rough and undefeated Italian as Savoldi's opponent, which should please local fans who asked that such a bout be made when it was learned that Savoldi was willing to wrestle here.

Savoldi, after hitting the down grade for a while, has started a comeback that is carrying him back to the top once more while Joe has his eye set on the crown now worn by Dan O'Mahoney. Garibaldi has defeated every opponent he has faced here and elsewhere in the past six months. Three other bouts will round out the card.

Other speakers will include A. J. McFadden, president of the California Agricultural Prorate commission; G. E. Says Dangerous Varicose Veins Can Be Reduced At Home

Rub Gently Upward Toward the Heart as Blood in Veins Flows That Way

If you or any relative or friend is worried because of varicose veins, or bunions, the best advice for home treatment that anyone in this world can give, is to get a prescription known as Moore's Emerald Oil.

Simply ask your druggist for an original two-ounce bottle of Moore's Emerald Oil (full strength) and apply night and morning to the swollen, enlarged veins. Soon you should notice that they are growing smaller and the treatment should be continued until the veins are no longer troublesome. So penetrating and powerful is Emerald Oil that old chronic sores and ulcers are often entirely healed.

GUARD YOUR CHILD DURING THE DANGEROUS "INDOOR DAYS"

Winter keeps children cooped up indoors much of the time. What sunshine they get is weak in rays that produce vitamin D, the builder of bones. Is there any wonder that so many youngsters have poor teeth and rickety bones?

Bridge the gap of these sun-shy months with McKesson's HIGH POTENCY COD LIVER OIL. It furnishes 2½ times the usual potency of vitamins A and D. Vitamin A guards against infection. Vitamin D gives "sunshine" values.

Highest grade Norwegian oil. Extra refinement makes smaller doses effective. You can also obtain McKesson's COD LIVER OIL (Standardized). Either plain or Mint Flavored. Specify McKesson's when you buy. Sold at all good drug stores.

Death From the Air Barring the Inventor The Republican Odds To Starve Italy

Warfare in Ethiopia consists largely in surprising the enemy in some narrow gorge or valley. Ethiopians have thus surprised Italians on a small scale. Now the Italians have shown that the thing can be done from the air by killing 2,000 Ethiopian warriors, of whom 20,000 were massed in the Mel Mezo valley, south of Makale. Ethiopia plans withstood, with fine courage, the attack with machine guns, incendiary and explosive bombs.

Arthur Brisbane

England really has free speech. On your soap box in Hyde Park you may say what you please, if you do not advocate crime.

But England does not like free speech from another country, through the ether. The British Broadcasting company will not let Marconi talk from Rome to Englishmen over the radio. He might convince them that it is preposterous to try to starve out Italy for doing in Ethiopia what England has done in many places. The ruling seems hard on Marconi, considering that he invented radio. Without him there would be no "British Broadcasting company."

Those that make betting a business are often found in their political judgments. They are at least cold, calculating; sentiment does not cloud their vision.

On the Republican Presidential nomination the betting now stands: Senator William E. Borah, 8 to 1. Governor Landon of Kansas, 10 to 1. Senator Vandenberg of Michigan, 15 to 1. Col. Frank Knox of Illinois, 15 to 1. Governor Hoffman of New Jersey, 20 to 1. Sen. David A. Reed, all 20 to 1.

Professional bettors agree that Governor Landon is gaining, and will probably lead the procession at 6 to 1 in a few days. Band wagon climbers are more and more polite to Governor Landon.

The "sanctions" wall thrown by England and France around Italy, smaller nations co-operating, to "suffocate and starve Italy," as Mussolini puts it, is now complete. Two million young organized Italians protest against the effort to punish Italy for doing to Ethiopia what England and France have done to other, more nearly civilized countries.

H. G. Wells, aged sixty-nine, younger and more brilliant than when he wrote "Doctor Moreau's Island" and "The War of the Worlds," now in America on his way to see Hollywood, says, "The film is a finer art than the novel, stage or the opera."

Britain's ambassador is conferring with our State department concerning Japan's plan to seize Chinese provinces, containing 95,000,000 Chinese, 35,000,000 more than the total population of Japan.

If the Japanese could control, arm and use 100,000,000 Chinese in the air and on the ground, that would be interesting. But it would not be our business, and it is to be hoped that the British will not persuade our state department that this country ought to attend to it.

Spiritually, politically and otherwise important is the proposed "merger" approved by bishops of the three branches of the Methodist Episcopal church. Together, the Methodist Episcopal church, Methodist Episcopal church, South, and Methodist Protestant church would number 7,500,000 members, the largest protestant group in America.

Young men are coming back into fashion. Dr. Alan Valentine, only thirty-four, former master of Pierson college at Yale, is made president of Rochester university and starts well by denouncing the "ballyhoo" of college athletes, football especially. He speaks with authority, not as a weakling bookworm, for he was a college athlete at Swarthmore, member of the Olympic team at Paris in 1928.

The American Bankers association reveals the interesting fact that our banks hold fifteen thousand million dollars' worth of government bonds—in figures, $15,000,000,000.

Well might a most important official of the government say: "Inflation? We have it now, biggest ever seen, frozen in the banks. Wait until it breaks loose."

After the Tory election in England prices went soaring on London's stock exchange. Companies that make war weapons and materials were most buoyant. The masses had voted for more, bigger and better battleships, and war, if necessary.

Washington Digest

National Topics Interpreted
by William Bruckart
National Press Building Washington, D. C.

Washington.—One of the New Deal policies about which there is an ever increasing complaint is its wanton destruction of the civil service. It used to be said, under Democratic and Republican administrations alike, that it was next to impossible to get a government job except through examinations conducted by the Civil Service commission. That is, there were few appointments available other than under civil service below the rank of Presidential selection. Now, the scene has changed to such an extent that there is little chance to get in the government through civil service and the bulk of the appointments therefore are of a purely politically-indorsed character.

I do not mean to say that the Civil Service commission has shut up shop, although it has been virtually dehorned, but I do emphasize that as of September 30—the latest pay roll figures for the government—the number of civil service workers was only slightly more than half of the total on the government pay roll exclusive of the army, navy and Marine corps and Civilian Conservation corps.

The Civil Service commission continues to issue its monthly statements on the government personnel but they are becoming increasingly less reliable because one of the most difficult things to get in Washington these days is the accurate figure on the number of workers employed by Uncle Sam. The commission records are complete as far as they go but they fail to go far enough. At this time, for example, the Civil Service commission reports that the government payroll covers 794,467 employees. That figure, however, does not include the vast army of employees of the Agricultural Adjustment administration who are scattered in every county in the nation. I have heard estimates that the number of these county chairmen, inspectors, investigators, etc., exceeds 110,000, but whether that is too large or too small I cannot be sure for the reason that there is no way by which the number can be checked. Similarly, it is next to impossible to ascertain the number of workers in some of the newer agencies, created under the guise of emergency conditions, because they too are scattered far and wide but the fact remains that the personnel of the government has been expanded more rapidly than ever in history and to the highest recorded peak even for war time.

The number of employees on June 30 was given by the commission as 719,440 from which it will be seen there has been an increase of more than 75,000 in three months. That is, there has been that much of an increase for which the commission has records, but again it must be remarked that the commission has no way of compelling some of the alphabetical agencies to supply it regularly with the number of employees on their payrolls. The number of federal employees aside from the military services when Mr. Roosevelt took office was approximately 585,000. The number of employees on the federal payroll when Mr. Coolidge retired and Mr. Hoover became President was roughly 545,000. From these the enormous growth of the government bureaucracy is at least hinted if not demonstrated fully.

Then, there are more yet to come. Several new agencies were created under acts of the last congress and others have since been created by executive order of the President. Take the Rural Rehabilitation administration, for example, Prof. Rexford Guy Tugwell, who used to be brain trust No. 1, has a fund of $250,000,000 with which to play and obviously Mr. Tugwell will need a great staff to assist him. The National Youth administration is another new one. It will not have as much money as Mr. Tugwell but it is starting its operation with $50,000,000—and that is quite a chunk of money to most of us. The National Labor board is hardly organized yet and the Social Security board has just begun to arrange a setup. Likewise the board to administer the Guffey coal law—a little NRA for the soft coal industry—has been appointed and is operating with only a few clerks. It cannot get along without a sizable corps of inspectors and examiners and investigators. It will have to have an extensive research staff in order that it can be supplied at all times with whatever facts and figures it needs or wants. So it goes on through the list almost unending.

One newspaper columnist had the audacity to say in his column the other day that if Relief Administrator Harry Hopkins really wants to solve the unemployment problem he ought to turn his attention to the government itself. At the rate of expansion, the government probably could be made to absorb the 3,500,000 unemployed to whom Mr. Hopkins was preparing to give work by December 1.

December 1 is hereabouts. But Mr. Hopkins has not succeeded in his much publicized plan to give all of the 3,500,000 unemployed workers jobs. He was doomed to failure from the start. He announced, it will be remembered, that all federal relief was to end on November 1, by which time he figured that made-work would be available for the 3,500,000. This figure was the topmost limit for which the federal government was to be responsible. The states and municipalities were to take care of the remainder of roughly 5,000,000 who had to have help.

November 1 came along and Mr. Hopkins changed the date to December 1. He did this after consultation with the President who announced with considerable emphasis that he meant just what he said and that federal relief was going to stop as of December 1. But it seems the machinery was too ponderous to get in motion in time to absorb all of these workers. Most folks recognized it weeks ago but Mr. Hopkins steadfastly clung to his dream and that dream, like so many others, was dissipated in the thin air and sank almost without trace.

On top of this Hopkins failure has come a serious problem. It is serious for the administration not only because of the fact that winter is coming on and people must be fed and clothed but it is delicate from the political standpoint. In the last few weeks a considerable number of complaints have reached Washington officials from those who were provided with work. They contend that the government wage rate is insufficient to meet their needs. This results from the increased cost of living—higher prices for food and clothing and the other necessities of life.

The administration is being blamed for this condition. Opponents of the New Deal are capitalizing this discontent. They are saying to the folks who find the wages too small that they have been made the victim of New Deal policies, such as tampering with the currency, nationalizing silver, paying bounties for reduced production on the farms and the like.

The upshot of the situation is that not only those on made-work who are paid by the government but those who are on legitimate payrolls of industry are becoming thoroughly dissatisfied. They are demanding more money. I do not believe anyone can forecast what will happen. One thing is certain; if industry must increase wages, consumers will have to pay the price. There will be further increases in the things we all buy in event higher wages are obtained from commerce and industry. And, if the government raises wages to those on made-work, the drain on the treasury will be correspondingly faster. The taxpayer has to pay this.

Few of us ever stop to think what a job it is to maintain the supply of money in circulation. Omitting any consideration of the paper currency which keeps the gigantic bureau of printing and engraving operating 24 hours each day and considering only the coins that jingle, it requires the operation of two or three great plants to mint our money.

The bureau of the mint in the treasury gave out some figures the other day that seem to me to be most interesting. They are interesting because of their size. On the basis of these figures, it is calculated that there are actually in the pockets of the American people the following number of coins, each figure being an approximation: 1,000,000,000 dimes, 1,400,000,000 nickels, 5,500,000,000 pennies, 400,000,000 quarters, 200,000,000 half dollars and approximately 33,000,000 silver dollars.

These figures furnish an interesting commentary as well on our present modes of living. They supply a sidelight on our system of taxation which calls for pennies, nickels and dimes here, there and everywhere as a result of sales taxes. Besides, transportation systems like the street cars call for an exceptionally large quantity of the minor coins like nickels and dimes. One could enumerate a score of factors in modern life that compel each of us to carry and use these small coins.

The mint bureau is authority also for the information that even this stupendous sum of minor coins seems insufficient. The mints, accordingly, have been speeded up and they are now working at a rate almost double that of 1934.

FARM POULTRY

ARTIFICIAL LIGHT AIDS EGG OUTPUT

Care Is Advised by Expert in Use in Houses.

Because experiments have shown that artificial light on fowls increases their production by means of a stimulating effect rather than causing any increased consumption of feed, lights should be used with a considerable degree of caution, warns an authority in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

If artificial lighting is used excessively, birds may be forced to produce at a rate beyond their capacity which will not last. Under normal conditions a flock of pullets should reach a production of 50 per cent between six and eight weeks after the first eggs are produced. The increase is uniform every week and when a flock of birds shows a normal condition there is no necessity for using artificial light, regardless of the season of the year.

When production shows a tendency to drop off each week rather than advance, however, it is a good practice to use some artificial light. One hour of light each day in addition to normal daylight is sufficient. This rule applies to all birds, whether they were hatched early and came into production in early fall or whether they were late hatched and are coming into production later.

All night lights may be used successfully with birds that fail to respond to the one-hour treatment.

Moult Can Be Avoided by Feeding Fattening Mash

When pullets come into production they frequently lay at a high rate of speed and their body weight tends to go down. A fall moult may then result.

This can be avoided, says a writer in Wallace's Farmer, by feeding a fattening mash consisting of 65 parts of ground yellow corn, 30 parts of ground oats or middlings and five parts of dried milk, either early in the morning or at noon. If liquid milk is available, the mash may be moistened with it rather than using the dry milk.

Since the use of fattening mash tends to cut down the consumption of the laying mash, the amount fed should never exceed two pounds per hundred birds. Feed only the amount the hens will clean up in 15 to 20 minutes, the amount being increased gradually up to the maximum or as the condition of the birds might require.

Keeping Monthly Record

All things considered, the monthly record is to be recommended over weekly, or seasonal records, says a writer in the Rural New-Yorker.

To force oneself to check up on what has been happening in each poultry flock at the end of each calendar month is good business and worth doing. It is vitally important to know both good and bad points in the poultry flock performance at least that often, in order to make changes, if necessary, to stop leaks or improve weak places, or to stress stronger points.

Broken Eggs Test Packing

Dozens of eggs are deliberately broken every week at one packing plant. Boxes of 180 are put into a machine, jolted about and the number of broken eggs noted. Research experts there are hoping to save poultry farmers hundreds of pounds of eggs in transport. "The smashing" machine was devised so that data could be collected about the resistance of different types of containers," an official said.

Poultry Notes

Clean and sufficient litter should keep the floor covered.

The winter egg yield frequently depends on the kind of poultry house used.

Well-grown pullets are absolutely essential to profitable winter production.

The older birds carried over for breeders should be dewormed after they have gone into the summer moult.

Yellow corn and green feeds darken the yolk of the egg but detract nothing from its value or quality.

It is time to take another look at the old hens, to cull out the profit-lossers and make room for the pullets this fall.

"Blood clots" are eggs with drops or clots directly on the yolk. The term "bloody eggs" refers to a bloody color of the albumen or white.

At maturity, the capons will average 15 per cent heavier than the cockerels. The foremost reason for caponizing is to improve the quality of the flesh.

STATEWIDE FARM AND RANCH NEWS

Frostless nights and bright days are resulting in what growers and shippers predict will be the best fall pea crop in the history of the Imperial Valley. More than 20 cars were shipped in a recent ten-day period.

A million and a half Connecticut oysters, comprising a full carload, have been planted in Humboldt bay, joining more than 25 million native oysters, described by oyster brokers as the finest obtainable anywhere in the United States. Already $50,000 in local capital has been invested in the Humboldt bay oyster industry.

With California fruit and vegetable growers lauding the new trade pact with Canada, the state's organized cattlemen are protesting the lowered tariffs, asserting compliance with Canadian requests for a 50 per cent reduction in tariffs on cattle and cattle products would work severe hardship upon American cattlemen and livestock producers.

Milk prices have been boosted one cent per quart in San Francisco, making the price 13 cents delivered or 11 cents at counters. Higher expenses of producers was given as reason for the increase.

Control of mustard in grain fields by means of sulphuric acid will be pushed on a commercial scale next year, now that the experimentation and demonstration have been completed, according to the state weed control committee.

Wage negotiations affecting 5,000 vegetable field and packing house workers reached an impasse at Santa Maria, when workers' representatives refused to attend a conciliation meeting. They insist upon 90 per cent closed shop and 5 to 15 cents per hour wage increases.

California fruit and vegetable growers will benefit by the reduction of duties brought about by the Canadian-American trade treaty. The present 30 per cent duty on fresh vegetables is cut to 15 per cent; fresh fruit duties are reduced 25 per cent; canned fruits 20 per cent and canned vegetables 33 per cent. Potatoes go on the free list and oranges, lemons and avocados will be duty free during January, February, March and April.

A commodity loan of $175,000 has been granted the Napa Valley Co-operative Winery of Calistoga by the Farm Credit Administration Bank for Cooperatives. The loan will be used in processing this season's vintage and in making advances to 110 grower-members. The winery operates plants in Calistoga and St. Helena, with a joint capacity of 1,500,000 gallons of dry wine.

California's turkey census shows a yearly production of more than 1,500,000, with an estimated farm value of at least $5,000,000. The output from hatcheries for the year showed an increase of approximately 45 per cent.

Milk bottle caps labeled with the names of "Jersey" or "Guernsey" dairy companies are illegal unless all cows in the dairy's herd are of the breed designated. This opinion was expressed by State Attorney General U. S. Webb in a letter to A. A. Brock, director of agriculture.

California bee keepers want a law permitting airplane dusting of crops only in windless weather when the powder cannot be carried over large areas. The arsenical powder kills the bees and pollutes the honey. This was one of the problems discussed before 200 delegates to the 45th annual convention of the California Bee Keepers Association in Oakland last week.

A proposed new order regulating the marketing of oranges and grapefruit grown in California and Arizona has been announced by Secretary Wallace. It is subject to a referendum of the growers in the two states. The proposed order, providing for proration and regulation of shipments, would replace the existing license as an enforcement measure for the agreement now in effect.

Indicating a growing interest in the artificial drying of rice to improve quality and reduce cost, eight new rice driers were constructed and put into use in the Sacramento Valley for the harvest season now closing. Advantages of rice driers include bulk handling, earlier harvest and elimination of field damage of crops.

Production credit loans advanced on crops and livestock in the eleventh district totaled approximately $35,000,000 on October 31.

A 900-pound Hereford steer from Utah was chosen king of the Great Western Livestock Show and finest bull in 11 states, at Los Angeles last week. Reserve grand championship for carload lots went to a group of Herefords exhibited by Dick Hathaway, 25-year-old oil magnate and cattle raiser of Santa Fe Springs, California.

Sugar Causes Brilliant Leaf Colors of Autumn

It's not an early frost, as commonly supposed, that produces the most colorful autumn leaves, says the United States Forest Service. It's a late frost—and the sugar in the leaf—that gives us the brilliant colors. Just the right combination of temperature and moisture is needed. The best colors come when the thermometer doesn't quite reach the freezing point for several weeks during the latter part of September and through October.

Silviculturists explain that before the leaves fall a layer of cells forms at the base of the leaf, which ultimately loosens the leaf, and, when it drops off, forms a scar. If frost doesn't arrive too soon, this layer forms early and quickly. It holds more sugar in the leaf and the sweet sap causes the brilliant reds and oranges and yellows that delight the eye. This is not only true of the gorgeous sugar maples in the north, but of most of the colorful hardwood trees—the oaks, elms, birches, other maples, sweet gum, black gum, hickory, dogwood, and many others. When frost comes too early the leaves dry and lose their sugar before they have time to take on high color.

Slot Machine Messages

Making or cancelling engagements is easy for the user of a device known as the "Notifier," developed in England for use in railway stations and stores and at large public gatherings, says Popular Science Monthly. By stepping upon a small platform and dropping a coin in a slot, the patron exposes a slowly moving paper roll on which he may write a message to a friend. The message remains in view for two hours. Several rolls are provided on the machine, so that a large number of messages can be accommodated. Such messages include explanations for unkept appointments.

SYNOPSIS

Perilla Fairfax and Corey, Malden are to be married the next day at Lovell Terrace, Long Island home of John Lovell, her stepfather. Gathered are Tony Gaskell, best man, a lawyer; Hilda Sheldon, maid of honor; and Pete Wilson and Bob Coles, friends of Perilla's brother, ushers. Corey is very wealthy. He is thirty-eight and Perilla twenty-four, but it is a true love match. Everybody is busy, including Jane Latimer, Mrs. Lovell's pretty and efficient social secretary. There is a dress rehearsal and Malcolm and Bob are sent to get the Tenney girls. When the party is breaking up the night before the wedding, Malcolm complains of a headache. Tony produces some white tablets and nearly everyone takes one, including Corey. After the wedding Perilla tells her mother that Bob had repeated his threat that if she ever married anyone except him, he would kill her, the bridegroom, or himself. Her mother insists Bob was only teasing her. In a Baltimore hotel room Corey tells Perilla, "You won't like my mother. She isn't lovable," then drops to the floor dead as he holds her in his arms. Alone, except for Boynton, the chauffeur, and Sarah, her maid, Perilla has Boynton telephone her father to come by plane with Malcolm. A physician says the death resulted from natural causes.

The place was a typical old southern home, and had Perilla gone there with Corey, as she had expected, she would have felt all its charm and grandeur, and gloried in thinking she was to become one of the fine old family.

As they mounted the steps of the Colonial porch, the great doors were swung open by two elderly manservants, who bowed stiffly.

"This way, if you please, ma'am," and the older man, looking almost like Uncle Tom, ushered them into a pleasant reception room, looking out on some gardens.

The man disappeared, only to return in a moment, and bid them to enter another room. This was quite evidently Mrs. Malden's own sitting room, being a comfortable, luxurious type, and showing decorations and mementoes of the past.

In a large and rather formal chair, sat an elderly, sharp-featured woman, whose handsome face was deprived of beauty by the expression of ill-nature and unkindness that marred it. Ignoring John Lovell, she stared at Perilla, and in a harsh, cold voice she said:

"So you're the girl who married my son!"

Surprised by this sort of reception, Perilla managed to control the resentment she felt, and said, quietly, "Yes, Mrs. Malden, I am, and I—"

A skinny, claw-like hand was shaken in her face, and the croaking voice went on:

"And murdered him."

John Lovell stepped forward in wrath.

"Come, Perilla, I will not let you be submitted to another speech like that!"

"You will not go, you will remain!" almost shrieked the old lady, but Lovell stood his ground.

"I will not stay to submit my daughter to another speech like that! A speech that I cannot stoop to reply to."

"I can, father, leave it to me. Did you love your son, Mrs. Malden?"

"Love him! Far more than you can guess or imagine."

"Then you cannot believe he would marry a girl who would murder him. If you loved him, as you say, you know his goodness and charm, you know his tenderness and gentle kindness. I, too, know all those things, and I know even more of his love and devotion than you do. But I know, too, that if you say such a thing as anyone killed him, I know you are insane."

The old dame fairly quivered as she looked at her daughter-in-law. "Yet he was killed," she said stormily. "My boy was sound and without weakness or blemish of any sort. The doctors said so, the insurance examiners said so, I, his mother, have all his life known of his strong, marvelous health. Now you come to me and tell me he is dead. You tell me he died suddenly, alone in a room with—with this woman—what can I think but that it was her deed?"

"Come, Perilla," Lovell said, again, "I cannot listen to this, nor let you listen. Say no more to Mrs. Malden, but come away. You are in danger here."

"Well said; she is in danger! Danger of being found out. Danger of having it known that she committed murder, danger that her black deed be fastened upon her!" John Lovell took two strides forward and clapped his hand over the speaker's mouth.

"Peace, woman!" he cried. "Not another word from your lying tongue! I knew your son. I knew his fine character, his noble nature. But I did not know that his nobility was great enough to hide the fact that he had a shrew for a mother. How the poor lad has suffered all his life. I am sorry, Mrs. Malden, that my daughter and I have seen you, sorry that the memory of you must ever be a cloud on our recollection of Corey. We will go, now, never, I hope, to see you again."

"You will not go, sir. It is my custom to have all my family at a family funeral. Though I hate to see you disgracing the occasion, I must decree that you and your daughter, and your son, if he is available, all make your appearance at the service on Friday."

"You wish us to stay here till Friday?"

"I do. I command it. We need not meet, but you must be present."

"We agree to conform to your wishes, on the provision that we need not meet. May we now be shown to our rooms?"

"You may, Seymour!" A woman in the uniform of a trained nurse came into the room. "Bid Dillon take these people to their rooms."

The nurse rang a bell, and a footman came, who escorted them from Mrs. Malden's presence.

He led them up a long flight of wide, shallow stairs, and opened a door into a large foyer, which he said, led to Mrs. Malden's rooms.

Perilla was met by a pleasant-faced, rather pretty maid, who ushered her in, while Dillon went on with John Lovell.

Reaching the rooms allotted to him Lovell asked Dillon to step inside. The man seemed to do so. "Dillon," he said, "who is head of the house now?"

"Mrs. Malden, sir, but she always was. Even when Mr. Corey was alive he had nothing to say about anything."

"Did he resent this?"

"No, sir. He preferred it so. Mr. Corey was a clever man, sir."

"I'm sorry to say these things, Dillon, but I must ask certain questions, and there seems to be no one else to speak to just now. Is there any, er—danger that during the night, say, Mrs. Malden might visit my daughter's room, and— and cause her any distress?"

"I hesitate to reply to that question, sir, but I feel I must advise you to have Mrs. Malden's own maid in the room with her. As the housemaid, Marie, she is true blue and may be absolutely depended on. And now, Mr. Lovell, will you and your daughter prefer to have your meals with Mrs. Malden, the elder, or by yourselves?"

"I should much prefer to dine alone tonight, Dillon, but I think it wiser—is the choice left to me?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then, tonight, I will dine with Mrs. Malden, the elder, but my daughter will not be with us. Make whatever arrangement is convenient for her dinner, and let her maid dine with her."

"Yes, sir," and the man looked satisfied.

"Then, that will do, Dillon, and send Boynton to me."

Dillon had practically warned him against letting Perilla spend the night without a companion. Well, Sarah was a host in herself when it came to caretaking.

But the strangest thing was Corey's lack of reference to his mother. As Lovell remembered, he had never heard Perilla's fiancé mention her, and he had wondered why. But it seemed of little importance, since they were going to see her and, as Lovell supposed, Perilla would be welcomed with open arms.

And doubtless she would have been, had the bridal pair gone to Malden house as they expected. But, granting the suddenness of the tragedy and the erratic mind of the old lady, was it so surprising that she took an antagonistic attitude toward Perilla? A different temperament would have welcomed the stricken young bride, and they would have mingled their tears; but this half-crazy invalid, who idolized her son, felt immediate rancor at the girl who had taken him from her, and now, as if she caught at the chance, accused her, in a frenzy of emotion, of killing him.

A light tap at the door aroused him, and at his bidding, Boynton came in. John Lovell looked at him, suddenly realizing that he knew little about this man.

"How long have you been with Mr. Malden, Boynton?" he asked, pleasantly enough, but watching him closely.

"Upward of four years, sir," Boynton replied, with a straight-forward look at his questioner.

"So long? Well, Boynton, you mustn't take it ill if I ask a few questions. This is all a grave matter—very grave. You were also valet to Mr. Malden?"

"When he wished it, sir. He was a man practically without a home. Of course, he lived here, but he was away more than at home. He kept a suite of rooms at his hotel in Philadelphia all the time, and that was his real home. All this you know, sir."

"Yes, of course. Now, Boynton, answer this carefully and truthfully. You were with Mr. and Mrs. Malden all the way to Washington. Did you ever have the slightest reason to think that my daughter was not deeply in love with her husband, and he with her?"

"Never, sir. If ever on the face of God's earth a married pair were devotedly in love with each other, those two were."

"Where were you educated, Boynton?"

The man looked up quickly, but answered, simply: "At Columbia university, sir. But I didn't specialize, and the crash came, and I could get no position such as I wanted. So, as I am a mechanic by nature, I chanced upon this job with Mr. Malden, and I gladly took it. It leaves me a bit of time to read, and I don't expect to be a chauffeur all my life. Will you dress for dinner now, sir? It's getting on."

"Very well. One more question; are you loyal to Mrs. Malden, my daughter?"

John Lovell was looking straight into the other's eyes, and on Boynton's rather good-looking face he saw nothing but absolute frankness and honesty. But it seemed to him that Boynton quivered his eyelashes ever so slightly, as he replied:

"As I was to my master, sir. I had the most sincere respect and admiration for him, and if I may say so, I have the same feelings toward his wife."

A little time later, a correctly attired, if somewhat bewildered gentleman, went downstairs to the drawing-room. His hostess awaited him, impressive looking in a dull, heavy robe of black.

A variety of cocktails was offered him, in which Mrs. Malden joined him, and he noted with relief that the effect upon her was pleasantly exhilarating.

"Your daughter will not dine with us, I understand," she said; "perhaps it is just as well."

"Nor shall I dine with you, madame, if you make any remark or observation that can be construed as a slight upon my daughter. I may as well tell you now that at any such remark I will leave your table."

"You are outspoken, Mr. Lovell," and the bright, beady eyes looked sharply at him, "but that permits me to be outspoken, too."

And then Pierre, the impressive looking French major-domo, announced dinner and stooped to assist his mistress from the room.

Lovell followed Mrs. Malden, to find, as he had anticipated, a sumptuous dinner, elaborately served.

The conversation was restricted to general subjects.

With the dessert Lovell allowed himself to introduce the topic of Malcolm's arrival.

"My son," he said, "who is in Washington, expects to come down here tomorrow. I trust there will be no objection."

"None at all. I think I have not heard of young Mr. Lovell."

"Nor is there one. I am stepfather to my wife's two children, Malcolm and Perilla, Mrs. Malden. By the way, have you any choice as to the exact name my daughter shall use?"

"It is my preference that I be called Madame Malden, and the— the croaking voice hesitated, as its owner threw a stealthy look at John Lovell, "the girl who married my son be called Mrs. Malden. It is always so in the family."

"That is well," he said. "Who is your lawyer, Madame Malden? I mean, have you a local man, or only Garth of Philadelphia?"

"Mr. Garth is—was my son's lawyer. I employ a Richmond man, to look after my legal affairs, which, naturally, are not of great impor-

ance. My financial matters are in the hands of Mr. Garth, who is really the family lawyer, and has been for many years. Why do you want to know?"

"Because I want him to advise you that, if only for your own sake, you would better refrain from repeating what you said to Mrs. Malden. You must know that slander is severely dealt with, and you are quite liable to get yourself into real trouble, while trying to trouble my daughter."

There was silence for a few moments, then Pierre entered, followed by Dillon, and the two men led Madame Malden from the room. She left without a word.

Lovell went to Perilla's rooms, and she stepped out on the balcony with him. She felt she could not talk freely, there were so many listening ears about. Lovell understood, and as they talked of various matters, he made, as he said, a route to follow when going home.

Perilla was not surprised when on his departure, after Sarah's return, he slipped a paper into her hand. Later, she found the note read:

"Do not be alarmed, Perilla dear, there is no real danger. But do not sleep in a room alone. I mean, let Sarah sleep in the dressing room adjoining your bedroom. Let no one come in, unless you know who it is, and then, no one but the little maid, or Madame Malden."

"Dad's all fussed up, Sarah," Perilla said, in a voice she tried to make jesting.

"Never mind, Miss Perilla, you just forget it all and go to sleep. You've had a hard day, Lord knows, and you may have a hard day tomorrow."

"May? I know I shall. And you know it, too, you old humbug."

It was not very long before Perilla was sound asleep, with the rest that comes after utter exhaustion. And after a time Sarah, too, fell into a deep sleep on the couch in the dressing room.

Neither awakened when the french window from the balcony was softly pushed open and a black-robed figure entered Perilla's room. But Perilla's quick hearing caught the sound of breathing and she opened her eyes to see some one leaning over her dressing table.

"Who are you? What do you want?" she said quietly, at the same time pulling on a small light at the headboard of her bed.

The figure, startled, jumped backward, and Perilla went on, "Why do you come in stealthily, Madame Malden? Had you tapped at my door I would have opened it. I was expecting you."

"Expecting me, were you?" came the response, in that high, screeching voice she had used before to Perilla. "Expecting me to come to get a confession of your guilt!"

"No," said Perilla, in a calm, conversational tone, "and you may as well stop that nonsense at once. I didn't kill my Corey, my darling, and well you know it. You are nobody's fool, except your own, and that is going to bring you to grief."

"I married Corey, and planned to visit you on our wedding trip, supposing you would love me, and I was quite ready to love you. Instead, you greeted me with a terrible, a fearful accusation. I cannot yet think you meant it; I think, I hope, you did not know what you said, so bewildered were you from grief. But my efforts to make peace availed nothing. What are you here for?"

"To—to—"

"You needn't tell me; I know. Now here is my last word. For Corey's sake, whose life with you must have been veritable hell, I will forget or seem to forget what you have said and done. I do not forgive you, Corey, himself, could not do that, but I will ignore it all, if you promise there will be nothing further of the sort. You know what I mean, you know all I mean—do you promise?"

Body of Caruso Lies in State; Embalmed in 1921

Because his friends and admirers in his native Italy could not bear to think of the body of Enrico Caruso moldering away in the earth after his death in 1921, they had it embalmed by a special process to preserve it indefinitely. The corpse of the famous singer still lies in a glass-covered casket in a mausoleum near Naples wrapped in an American flag. Clothing on the body is changed every three years.

How California Counties Derived Their Names

Mono county—created April 24, 1861. This county derived its name from the Monache Indians, as the Yokuts, their neighbors, called the tribes of this region. In Spanish, the name is interpreted as "monk-ey." The Monaches were closely related to the northern Piutes of Nevada and the Bannocks of Idaho. Two branches of these tribes now are locally recognized—the Piutes of Bridgeport and Mono lake and the Washges of Carson valley and regions to the north.

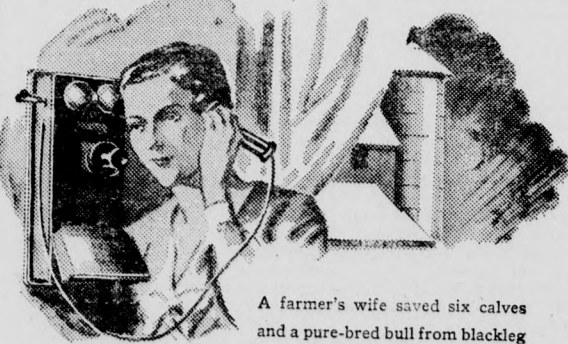

Forming the northern section of the Inyo-Mono playground, this county combines extraordinary scenic, recreational, hunting and fishing attractions with industries centered on sheep, cattle and poultry raising, mining, the growing of apples and other hardy fruits. Here are snow-capped mountains reaching a height of 12 and 13 thousand feet, great forests, beautiful lakes, volcanic Mono craters, the unusual is washed by the waters of the Pacific. To the east are the picturesque Diablo mountains and to the south the Gabilan range. In between are fertile valleys, particularly Mono lake, the "Dead Sea of America," Bodie, famous mining camp of pioneer days, and many other places of interest. No fish be declared forfeited if the successful bidder refuses to enter into said contract after being requested so to do by the School District.

The successful bidder will be required to furnish a labor and material bond in an amount equal to 50% of the contract price, and a faithful performance bond in an amount equal to 100% of the contract price, said bonds to be secured from a surety company satisfactory to the Federal Emergency Administration of Public Works and to the School District. A list of such surety companies is on file with the Board and Architects.

The CAMPBELL UNION HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT reserves the right to reject any or all bids and/or waive any irregularity in a bid. Unless otherwise required by law, no bidder may withdraw his bid for a period of thirty (30) days after the date set for the opening thereof.

THERE'S plenty of sunshine in the summertime at the shore. But winter suns are weak in rays that produce vitamin D. Children particularly need this vital "sunshine" vitamin to help build sound teeth and bones.

McKesson's VITAMIN CONCENTRATE TABLETS OF COD LIVER OIL provide vitamin D, as well as vitamin A, which helps to build up resistance to infection in general. Also, each tablet contains one grain of dicalcium phosphate.

Each chocolate-coated tablet brings you all the vitamins in one teaspoonful of Cod Liver Oil, U. S. P. X. (revised 1934). A grand way for children to get their cod liver oil values.

Begin today. Get these tablets at your druggist's. A $1 bottle brings you 100 of McKesson's VITAMIN CONCENTRATE TABLETS.

The new bus routings have not been worked out, said Superintendent Arthur L. Wood, but the remaining cars on First street will be taken off, to be replaced by buses, after the holidays.
